So that the work done and power exerted shall not be equal to each other, as worked out in the problem, the height to which the water is raised should be less than that given. As another example: What is the largest size pump, fitted as Fig. 37, that could be used for raising water to a height of 60 ft. above that in the well? The formula then becomes Where P--man s power in lbs. L = distance of handle from centre of crank shaft in inches. S = distance of crank between centres in inches. H = height to be lifted in feet. W = weight of water on a circular inch in the barrel for each foot of head = 34 lbs. D = diameter of pump in inches. and $v = 4.9 = 2.213$ in. as the diameter sought. Here again an equilibrium is established, and the pump should be a little less, so that power may exceed load. From this working out we are led to the conclusions that the pump mounted as shown by Fig. 37 is only satisfactory when of a small size, or used for raising water to a moderate height. The flywheel has an advantage in that, when fairly heavy, it steadies the action of the pump. By its momentum it carries the motion of the pump beyond those parts...
