Excerpt: . . . colors and crayon, the productions of the most eminent. 1rtis: of ti. e age. tx. -th of the English, French, Belgium. Dutch German and other schools, some. . : which visitors purchase daily, and their vacant places are occupied by others immediately, to ac-- . smp. ish which some twelve hundred pictures are ci snstantly kept on hand. In the Transepts and Nave are some of the finest statuary that human eye ever rested upon, v, me of which are of marvellous size. In the Carriage department are carriages of elegant workmanship, constructed of the very best materials, but in their construction about three times the amount of wood and iron is used that is used by carriage makers in this country, which gives them to the eye of an American resident a very clumsy and cumbersome appearance. I certainly saw no necessity for such waste of material, for they have the most beautiful roads to travel over I ever saw. In the large basement of the palace is an American skating pond, i. e. , a prepared floor whereon the parlor skates are freely used, an excellent place to teach the young their preliminary lessons in skating before taking to the ice. There are also within the extent of the grounds a magnificent rosary, secondary island, geological islands of extinct islands and animals. We must now bid adieu to London for the present, and take my readers to France, but will speak further of the...
