Not illustrated. 1848 Excerpt: . . . CHAPTER VI. TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 22. The journals of the Opposition appeared with the notice, in large letters, at the head of their papers, that the Banquet was given up, and an appeal to the population of Paris to keep order, formed a very prominent part of the announcement. The gauche were evidently alarmed, while ministers were confident, and their journals sang a triumphant song of victory. From an early hour detachments of Municipal Guard, troops of the line and cavalry, were seen moving towards the Boulevards and the Chamber of Deputies; it became known that heavy squadrons of cavalry had entered Paris during the night, while others were concealed within the Hippodrome, or were bivouacked round the fortifications. The spies of the Government reported during the night that there was a total absence of conspiracy. To try and discover something, the police had, on the Sunday night, effected a number of arbitrary arrests at the masked balls of the Opera and Ambigu-Comique. This audacious proceeding produced no result. The weather was disagreeable, even wet. A sombre and threatening sky hung over the town, but from six in the morning the Boulevards presented an animated appearance. Crowds of working men, of shopkeepers, began to move towards the Church of the Madeleine, in front of which the procession was to have met and formed. Many were not aware that the Banquet was given up, and went to witness the departure of the cortege, while those who...
